I'm not sure if going that far back was a good thing. It made me realize I have very few personal emails, get very few calls or texts, and in general only talk to people once or twice a week.

When I don't think about it I'm not bothered, but when i do I can't help but feel like I'm just one of those people that's kept around until they're needed then discarded.

Anyways. Thanks for the hrrm... helpful link.

Why did you label your messages "G-mail"?

I have multiple email id's that forward to one central gmail inbox (which I don't give out to anyone). I send emails from that one gmail id , with the "from" field as whichever address I want.

I do the same with my accounts. In college it gets annoying to check all of your department, school, and personal addresses.

Gawh, fucking shit man. This needs a NSFL notice. I clicked on it and was instantly sent back in time to the "lovey dovey" stage of my first relationship and had to work my way to the breakup a year later. Then it wouldn't let me leave the site when I hit the page back button. FUCK.

I'm totally with you, (wo)man.
Back to two relationships ago, 12/12/2001.
Before we had started dating, but when we were all gooey and lovey.
Man ...

I hate thinking about those times. I still have Thunderbird archives of that kind of thing that I just can't bring myself to destroy.

Google announced Gmail to the public on April 1, 2004.

Damn, I had to wait 6 weeks to get an invite. But it was worth it, goodbye Outlook Express and stupid 2Mb Hotmail.

Then I probably imported it in from somewhere.
It's late, and I am clearly not thinking clearly.
Clearly.

I'm on my work computer, could you tell me where does that link take you?
permalink parent

thumper242 2 points 3 hours ago [-]

The very first emails in your gmail account.
As in, when you first started using gmail.
permalink parent

cuddlyogre 2 points 3 hours ago [-]

Every single email you ever sent or received through gmail.

same here, girlfriend from back in 2004, luckily it wasn't one I fell in love with - otherwise I'd be on a downer all day.

I see a "You don't have any emails. Our servers are feeling unloved" for a few seconds before it loads. Presumably my mail history is too awesome for google.

THANK YOU! Besides some rather NSFL depressing things, ex's etc., I found so many old pictures that I'd sent to others, which eventually were destroyed with an old hard drive, and I assumed till now, were lost forever! I've found them! Magical.

Pah, I started using gmail in 2007 and that only takes me back to late 2008. I guess that's what happens when you use your gmail account as a place to store logfiles. I dunno how many emails I have stored in gmail but it must be millions

I've got one email on that page; an invite to the Office 2007 beta. Can't believe that was five years ago.
